The Principal's Message

MR. R. W. ASSEISTINE
Principal of the Normal School, Saskatoon

ON August the twentieth, 1912, the Saskatoon Normal School began its first session. There were twelve second class and fifty third class students. You are now drawing to the end of the first twenty year period in the history of this institution. During those twenty years 2671 young men and women have attended this school; of these you form the last 270. Two hundred and twenty-five of you were born within this period. Twenty years is a long time in the life of an individual; it is infinitesimal in the life of an institution. The life of either, however, is important not so much on account of the number of years each has lived as it is for what each stands.

You cannot have failed to observe that in the long story of the struggle of mankind to fit its youth better for the activities of life, there has been a great variety of aims, and that the most common characteristic in all these was the tendency to throw the whole emphasis on some one factor. At one time it was the acquisition of knowledge and information, at another the supreme importance lay in the development of the individual, then the welfare of society and the production of workmen skilled in some particular vocation by means of some specific study.

Probably a more fitting comparison could not be found than in the fable of "The Six Blind Men from Hindustan". Like the elephant in this fable, education has many parts, many factors, none of which we can afford to neglect; and like the elephant, too, doubtless there are some of them of greater importance than others. The tail, the trunk, the leg do not constitute the elephant; it is something vastly more important than one of these or of all of them put together. How much truer is this of the individual whom we wish to educate, and of this idea which we call education.

Undoubtedly there should be a very close relation between the kind of training pursued in a Normal School and the philosophy of education upon which the institution is based. Bismarck is reported to have said, "What you would have appear in the life of the nation, you must first put in your schools." Might I add that what you would have appear in the life of your pupils, you must first put into your teachers.

The elephant would be an incomplete animal with one of its legs lacking, its trunk or perhaps even its tail missing. So, far be it from me to minimize the importance of knowledge or the knowledges for that matter, or the necessity of sending out students capable of doing a good job, teachers who have memorized all procedures and mastered all the tricks of the trade, who by constant practice have reduced these to smooth working habits.

These are important, but they do not seem to constitute either individually or collectively the thing we want the young teacher to stand for. Above and beyond these, and, as Browning would put it, "resting on it", we want to send out young teachers who can see clearly and think straight, who have vision, initiative, a firm purpose and a will to do, a refined and purified taste, who are not afraid to be alone, who can find joy and inspiration in the flower that grows by the roadside, as well as in the favorite book that rests on the table by the fireside, who have a keen zest for life, interest in their fellows and a will to make their best contribution to society.

Why do we want these things in our teachers? Because we want them in the pupils whom these teachers will have in their schools.

A long time ago a man who had seen much of the world said to this effect, "Yes, get knowledge, get power, get skill, but with all thy getting, get wisdom". Browning in his poem, "A Death in the Desert", points out that life consists of at least three things, viz: "What knows", "What does", "What is", and the greatest of these, like the three virtues of old, is "What is". Why? Because the other two "lean" upon it.

A few years ago at Cambridge, Quiller-Couch in one of his lectures said, "The man we are proud to send forth from our schools will be remarkable, less for something he can take out of his wallet and exhibit for knowledge, than for being something—whose judgment we can trust to choose the better and reject the worse”.

And just the other day, E. D. Martin in his work “The Meaning of a Liberal Education” wrote: “Education has to do with insight, valuing, with understanding. . . and to think and act in ways that distinguish men from animals and higher men from lower”, and Boyd H. Bode, “Adaptability is vastly more important in Education than mastery of routine. To provide a sound education is a very different problem from training mechanics by the method of job analysis. It is necessary to rely on ‘general’ education after all”.

My sincerest wish for you as you stand on the threshold of your first school is that you may get knowledge and skill, but that with all your getting you may get wisdom, in order that in some small measure the children entrusted to your care may know, and do, but, above all, be something.
